

Anesthesia and your Pet

Many pet owners worry unnecessarily about anesthesia in their pets. Although anesthesia can never be completely free of risk, today's modern anesthetics make that risk very small.

The same anesthetics that allow complicated surgeries such as heart and kidney transplants to be done on humans are used in pets as well. Even very frail animals can usually be anesthetized safely. In general, the risks from NOT performing a needed procedure, such as dental cleaning or tumor removal, are much higher than the risk from the anesthesia.

We use preoperative blood tests and radiographs (X-rays) to help us determine whether a procedure will be safe for your pet before it is performed. We require preoperative blood screening for all pets before anesthesia is administered. Even young and apparently healthy animals can have serious organ dysfunctions which are not evident without such testing. Chest X-rays are taken if there is any suspicion of heart or lung disease, or cancer. An EKG (electrocardiogram) before anesthesia is also recommended to diagnose an abnormal heart rhythm, which could affect the safety of a procedure.

During anesthesia your pet will be monitored closely for blood oxygen levels, heart rate and heart beat intensity, throughout the surgery. Blood pressure and temperature are also monitored. The anesthesia is always administered by certified and licensed veterinary technicians or doctors to ensure safety and proper dosing. IV fluids may also be given, especially if kidney or liver function is compromised, to ensure your pet's full recovery.

With proper care and monitoring, your pet should go home after anesthesia just as perky and healthy as when he arrived at the hospital, whether he or she is 16 months or 16 years of age.

If you have further concerns about anesthesia in your pet, we would be happy to discuss the risks and benefits of any procedure with you and explain the exact protocol that will be used. Please let us know!
